I have read carefully your letter of 29 March 1954, the copy of your letter to [REDACTED], and your memorandum for the record forwarded with your letter. I have consulted with the appropriate offices of the Agency and have examined their records on your case. I am in a position, therefore, to give you a final answer on your status.

This Agency has established rigid qualifications for employment. Among these qualifications in each case are the educational background, the experience, the health of the individual, and such other elements as may be appropriate to any one case. The criteria for qualification are necessarily determined by the Agency. In your case a medical determination has been made by the Medical Staff of the Agency that you no longer meet the medical standards for employment by this Agency. I am satisfied that this is a final determination made after due consideration and based on adequate information. This medical determination has been accepted by the Agency and you are, therefore, finally disqualified for any further employment here.

This determination has no implications whatever of disloyalty nor do we have any information that you have in any way compromised any security requirements. If, however, you present yourself to the Agency for reemployment, it will be necessary to serve you immediately with a notice of involuntary termination on the basis of the medical disqualification. If you wish to avail yourself of the privilege of submitting a resignation, you may do so between now and 30 April 1954.

Very truly yours,
